RAFT PICKED UP WITH EIGHTEEN SURVIVORS

make no attempt to save his life, in the event the chance is given him. Such is the chance made by the survivors picked up by the steamer Topeka this afternoon, in the hearing of Captain S. B. Gibbs of the marine board of underwriters. According to their story Captain Johnson is broken over the great loss of life attending the wrecking of the Valencia.

With tense, drawn face, Captain Johnson, clinging to the rigging with his arms and time and again prayed for assistance.

Only Thought of Passengers.
"My God, send relief to my passengers," Captain Johnson was heard to say yesterday morning just before the life rafts left the steamer.

Passengers and crew during the night prior to the departure of the life rafts, according to the saved, begged Captain Johnson to place a life belt about his waist. This he persistently refused to do. In spite of the fact that those near him and who still thought of him kindly light, begged him to think of his family and friends, Captain Johnson would not do a single thing to help his condition.

It is estimated that there are about thirty persons on the raft. About thirty left yesterday morning.

Passed in a Fog.
Captain Gibbs, who left this city for the scene of the wreck on the City of Topeka, returned to Seattle on a steamship Texan, which passed in through the cape last night.

"We arrived at the scene of the wreck about 9 o'clock yesterday morning," said Captain Gibbs. "At that time we could see nothing of the Valencia. There was a thick fog hanging over the straits and nothing but the white foam of the breakers could be seen from our decks."

"About 10 o'clock the fog commenced to blow. The sea then commenced to rise and it was feared that all hope for those on board the wrecked steamer was useless. The City of Topeka steamed to about three-quarters of a mile of the Valencia. Owing to the heavy sea it was not deemed wise to proceed further.

Survivors Picked Up.
"We spoke the steamer Queen and were informed that about 9 o'clock there were estimated to be about sixty persons still clinging to the rigging of the Valencia. The City of Topeka then cruised about the entrance of the straits in the hope of finding survivors. At 12:30 we picked up the raft."

"The condition of the survivors was deplorable. All were so numb that they could not get on their feet and had to be hauled aboard the Topeka in the arms of our crew."

"It was terrible on that raft," said O. L. Allison to me after he had been taken care of by the steamer. "The water was awfully cold and our limbs became so benumbed that we could not even move them sufficiently to keep ourselves warm. I thought all would die of exposure. Huge seas came tumbling clean over, burying us beneath them until all suffered from swallowing water while trying to breathe."

Boats Were Smashed.
"The survivors informed me that the Valencia was going at the time she was struck. All of the boats on the windward side were smashed by big seas which came aboard. I was also informed that every one on the vessel behaved bravely and that the prevailing, except during the period when the first of the boats were launched."

"During the interval when those on board saw that it would be useless to try and launch the boats, the sailors volunteered to attempt to get a line ashore. He was told that such a feat was impossible, and that he would only lose his life. He insisted he was perfectly willing to take his chances."

Sailor Gave Up His Life.
"With a life line about his waist, and the thinnest of a rope, the sailor, whose name I did not get, stepped to the rail and plunged into the foam of the boiling sea. For a second he disappeared. Soon, however, he was seen very below the vessel in the hollow of two gigantic waves."

"For a time he appeared to hold his own with the sea. Those on board attempted to keep him off the worst of the rocky places, but they were unable to do much because it was so dark and anything. Another huge wave parted the line and the sailor who had given his life in an attempt to save the remaining passengers was dashed to pieces on the rocks."

Women Refused to Go.
"When the time came for the lifeboats to leave, the Valencia yesterday, the officers ordered all the women to take to the rafts. The survivors state that in spite of the fact that the Valencia was beginning to break up, the women refused to get into the lifeboats and on the rafts, stating that they would take their chances with the ship rather than leave."

"The officers did all they could to impress upon their minds the fact that there was but little chance for help after the last boats had gone. Still they refused to take to the life rafts and as a consequence men took their places. That was one of the first questions I asked those on the raft when they came aboard the City of Topeka. All stated that the best of order prevailed and that the men showed every courtesy to the women."

"The City of Topeka passed quite a

Suffered Great Agony.
"The survivors told me that for a time they suffered the keenest agony, fearing that they would not see them. The sight of a steamer bearing down on us practically saved our lives, or that many of us, for we were about to die up from exposure," remarked one of the rescued. "I don't know what I would have done if the steamer had passed us. We were mighty glad to see her, and that's a fact."

"Captain Lyons of the steamer Texan told me," continued Captain Gibbs, "that when he was coming up the coast from San Francisco there was a strong tide running at the rate of thirteen miles an hour. He added to this there was a strong southerly gale blowing, and it is his opinion that perhaps the same conditions prevailed when the Valencia was coming up the coast, and that it was the wind and tide which confused Captain Johnson."

"One of the sad affairs which the survivors told me concerning the Valencia was that of the little boy, still clinging to the rigging when they left yesterday morning. The little chap is now the only one of his family. The others were lost."

GOVERNMENT BLAMED.
Tug Should Be Located Near Mouth of the Strait of Fuca.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 25.—W. T. Fenton, assistant general manager of the Pacific Coast company, operating the lost steamer Valencia, blames the United States government for the loss of life on the steamer. He said today: "The government is well known criminally negligent of coast shipping interests. Years ago, congress should have provided for a government tug, located near the mouth of the Strait of Fuca, in touch of telegraph wires and cables, for the purpose of saving lives in the event of such a disaster as the Valencia case. With such a tug, properly equipped with life-saving apparatus, the majority if not all the men, women and children on the Valencia would not have lost their lives.
